People often claim, that strong body has a strong spirit. But is this statement true for teens? Is it important for your generation to practise sport?

In my opinion, keeping healthy and fit is as needy for teens as for any other age group - Especially nowadays, in postindustrial times, when everything can be done without humans interruption. For instance - sum up all hours you spent sitting per day, and analyze, how can sitting affect your back. Does back illness worth that?

Additionally, doing fitness is becoming a trend today. Everyone like to be surrounded by beautiful people, that's the reason why social media is filled with sports and motivation today. Being healthy and strong you automatically become authority among your peers.

However, there is another opinion, saying that teenagers should not spend time on sports, but study science. I partly agree +, because a person should be ^{well} educated in all spheres of life.

(The) Summing up all I've said, that's why I think ^{practising} sports is important for teens.
