Nowadays a lot of people change their careers and places of residence several times during their lives. I believe it can be considered as a positive development. Let's look at reasons that lead people to do it and the consequences.

When people change their careers, it is mostly of their want of having a better job. They may be not contented with their salary, work conditions or other people. For example my aunt worked as a cashier in a shop and she didn't like it because of terrible work conditions and overtime work that wasn't paid. She works as a cashier in a bank now and she likes it very much: her salary is higher, the overtime work is being paid and she met a new group of people that work with her. As you can see, changing a career may lead to having better work conditions and meeting new people.

When people change their places of residence, they do it because either because they don't like it or they want to experience something new. For example, my family moved from a little village to a big city because there wasn't any work and the education was pretty poor. Now my parents have highly paid jobs and I am getting a decent education. As I have already mentioned, there are people who want to experience living in different countries speaking other languages and exploring new cultures. For example, one of my uncles lives in Poland because he wanted to learn more about Polish people and culture.

As a conclusion, I would like to say that it is definitely good to change careers and places of residence several times for people. Doing so, it helps people to find places and activities they like.
