Nowadays a number of people who change their careers and places of residence several times during their lives is increasing. But is this a positive development?

I think that this development is pretty positive. First of all, people want to find a perfect place for living where they will feel safe and confident. If living in your native town seems boring and depressing you can move out and try living in another place where you will be happy.

My friend recently moved to Moscow and he doesn't regret it.

Secondly, we all dream about finding an interesting job. You spend most of your life working and that is why it is important to do what you love. Sadly lots of people can't find a job near their house or even in their town. They end up being not satisfied with their work and life in general. For example, my friend had to move to St Petersburg with her parents because her father could not find a job for a really long time.

In conclusion, I want to say that if you have an opportunity to change your career or place of residence and you feel like your life will be better than you should not lose this chance.
