Nowadays the tendency of moving to another place of living and of choosing ~~an~~ another job, is being widely discussed.

In my opinion, such way of development can be considered as well-going. Firstly, to change the career a person should study a lot. Studying develops people, for example, one's mind abilities increase, he'll memorise things easier and his knowledge become wider. If there are more and more people who knows a lot, it'll be a good tendency.

Secondly, travelling and changing your place of living can help you to see the world. Comparing various life conditions in different countries helps to make a final conclusion where you life will be the best. Settling and living in a better place is also a positive tendency.

Nevertheless, others may say that it's not good that more and more people change their life. Mainly as it will cost a lot to them. They should pay amount of money to fly away, to rent a house, to get ^{the} second education, etc. It's very risky to spend so much money.

To my mind, if someone really wants to try something new, ^a huge price won't stop him. To protect himself, he'll save some money to return back in a bad case.

Thus, I consider that the tendency of changing your life is definitely positive. It's great that more and more people keep it.
