Nowadays, kids want summer holidays to be longer and terms to be shorter. There are some reasons for that.

Firstly, of course, long terms are better for learning. There'll be much more time to study and less time for kids to forget ~~the~~ things they have learned. There are few disadvantages of that. For example, children need rest. It makes their brain fresh and ready for new complicated work. Moreover, most of children are being under pressure by their teachers, what leads to anxiety and other mental illnesses.

Secondly, making summer holidays longer seems ~~as~~ <sup>to be</sup> a good idea. Kids'll have time for their own hobbies and self-education. On the other side, the main school's goal is to socialize young boys and girls. If the summer holidays are longer, there is a possibility of kids being unconfident, shy and sick.

As for me, I would dive made terms and holidays equal. There is no chance of making terms or holidays longer without huge disadvantages. Of course, there is a way to leave it be and not to change the schedule.

To sum up, I wouldn't recommend adults changing school's education process. There is no need and sense of it. I consider present process is the most appropriate.
