Every student likes holidays and looking forward for them during the school year. In our country, summer holidays last for three months. It's not just about relax and have fun, it's also a wonderful opportunity to raise your skills in something you're fond of, prepare for the exams, get your first work, etc. But how many students continue studying during summer vacation? Isn't it a bit difficult for them to dive into the school process after holidays? Should they return to school earlier? There are different opinions about this, so let's discuss it.

Firstly, if we look from the point of learning, we may say that terms are too short. Of course, it's very important to take enough break, but aren't three months more than enough? During this time students forget a great part of information they learned if they don't practice by themselves. That is why, when the school year begins, they spend about a month to actually remember how to study.

On the other point of view, school gives us tons of information, that not always useful for each pupil. For ones who really want to develop their minds, summer holidays is the most productive period, that they use for 100%. They do what they like or really need and find time to rest besides that. So there's no need to change something.

I, personally, agree with the first opinion. School gives us not only knowledge but social skills too. Nowadays a lot of students sit at home if there's no need to go outside. They think a lot and concern a lot, so when August ends they have doubled problem: they don't remember how to study and how to communicate with classmates.

As a conclusion I want to say, that one month really will be enough to rest from studies and complete your other goals.
