There are cases when parents prefer to teach their children at home to sending them to school. This type of education has its own advantages and disadvantages. In the next paragraphs we will consider the both.

Studying at home might be a good thing. Nevertheless there is one important condition. Your parent must have an appropriate education and be capable of teaching you all the material and topics that you were supposed to learn at school. The learning process can be enjoyable for a child for several reasons. Firstly, your mum or dad would be more patient than a school teacher. You won't be shouted at for making mistakes or misbehaving. The environment doesn't include stress. I think it is the biggest advantage of studying home. Secondly, you have more time for your hobbies because you don't spend time to get to school and you do not have a strict schedule as at school.

However, being always at home can have downsides.

You automatically lose an opportunity to make new friends, socially interact with different people every day. It can cause other problems like being afraid of public speaking, not having enough courage to start a conversation first. At school you also learn how to connect with people regardless age gap and interest difference.

Overall, each family has a right to decide what is better for their child. Before making decision you have to consider all advantages and disadvantages. Your child's education becomes your responsibility but not school.
